A REAL RAINSTORM.

That weather observer of ours doesn't do things by halves. When he gives us a hot spell it is a sure enough hot spell, one of the straight list no discount kind. When it is a dry spell it is so dry that it makes the Sahara look like a blooming rose garden. And when it rains, well, it really, truly rains. Dr. Hyatt just opens the valve and then goes away and forgets all about it. We actually didn't think it could rain in Salt Lake at this time of the year as it rained Sunday and yesterday. As these lines are being written it looks as if it might keep right on raining until the cold weather sets in.

In was most inconsiderate in Dr. Hyatt, too, to bring the great rain on just at this time. True, we needed some moisture all right. The lawns were beginning to look a trifle brown and faded and there was plenty of dust in the streets. But look here, doctor: Don't you know that in just about two weeks the National Irrigation congress assemblies in Boise? Don't you know that a lot of people that we want to interest in the irrigation movement are going to be there? How in the world can we convince them that this is a semi-arid country when they see nothing but beautiful green fields and an abundance of beautiful, clear water?

"This an arid country?" we can hear them saying. "Why, it looks more like a garden of Eden. You fellows don't need any national irrigation works out here. What you need is a system of reclaiming your lands by piping off the surplus water." And some of the distinguished guests may go back to their homes dead set against national irrigation works, convinced that it would be a waste of money to put them in. Ah, Dr. Hyatt, you were indeed thoughtless, but it can't be helped now. The thing has happened and there's no use grieving about it. Let us put on as brave a front as we can muster.

Another discouraging thing is that we must give all the credit, or nearly all of it, to the "reform" administration. The "reformers" gave us the rain. Nobody saw such a rain as this during the Morris administration. Therefore the credit must belong to the "Americans." They won't be a bit backward about claiming it either. They will tell us during the fall campaign that if it had not been for the "American" party's splendid conduct of municipal affairs, with special reference to the water supply, every lawn in Salt Lake would have died and lots of people would have had to get along for a day at a time without a drink of water. They can get a drink of anything intoxicating they want under this administration any day in the week.

Seriously, though, the rain is a good thing. It is a pity that it could not have come in less violent doses, but let us not complain. We'd like some more some time.

PASSING OF "LEW" MORRISON.

It is a great thing for a man, after the lapse of twenty-odd years, during which he has been doing the same thing in the same way night after night and several times a week in the daytime, to be as enthusiastic, as interested as he was in the beginning. That was the happy faculty of Lewis Morrison, who died in New York Sunday. The news of Mr. Morrison's death will be received with interest and regret by many thousands of people in the United States. Comparatively few knew the man personally, but well nigh everybody had seen him at least once in his production of "Faust," with himself as Mephisto.

Some of us were boys in knickerbockers when the billboard man first came to our town with the announcement in red letters on a white background, "The Devil is Coming." Perhaps we shuddered at the news, not being sure that the devil we had heard about in the Sunday school and the long church session was not the devil whose coming the posters announced. Later we felt relieved when we saw it was only a play devil that was about to descend upon the town. But how we thrilled down our boyish spinal columns when we saw him on the stage, if we were fortunate enough to see him.

Lew Morrison was great in that part. He gave to it the best years of his stage life, and he enjoyed every minute of it. In his time he visited every city of any consequence, and many of no consequence, in the United States, and in all of them he made friends. Those who came to know him as he was found that he was not a devil at all, but a genial, kindly gentleman who took a keen interest in life and in his work, who liked to have his friends about him, who could tell a good story well and enjoy hearing one. But the stage was his work and his life. He was never so happy as when behind the footlights.

In his later years Mr. Morrison was practically stone deaf. He never heard a word that was spoken by the company about him on the stage, and those that knew of his infirmity often wondered how he managed to catch his cue, for he never missed one. The secret lay in his thorough knowledge of the part and the play. When he was not in a position to read the lips of the actors he could judge by the elapsed time the moment he should begin his next speech.

Morrison has passed forever now from life's stage, but there will be many to miss him and mourn his loss. His passing deprives the theatrical profession of one of its unique characters.

TOO MANY DROWNINGS.

The list of drownings this season has been much longer than the ordinary list. Never a day passes but that the dispatches contain stories of deaths in the water. Yesterday's Herald told how twenty-three people had gone to watery graves in different parts of the United States. And most of these deaths are entirely unnecessary. The exercise of a little caution, a little ordinary prudence, would prevent the great majority of them.

The victims of drowning accidents are confined to no class. Many of them are, or were, splendid swimmers, men and women familiar with the water, supposedly acquainted with its dangers. Theirs is the familiarity that breeds contempt, for, secure in their strength and their knowledge, they venture out far beyond the danger point, a sudden cramp or exhaustion seizes them and down they go, never to rise in life. Other victims are the inexperienced, who, after an hour on the water in a frail boat, think they know all there is to know about it. The boat is rocked by one of the occupants, or some unexpected accident happens, and down into the water the party goes, down to death.

The Herald believes in water sports; it believes that every boy, and every girl, too, should be taught to swim. To learn to swim one must go into the water, but one should also exercise the greatest prudence. It is not necessary to swim a river or to swim far out into the sea in order to demonstrate to your friends your knowledge of swimming and your fearlessness. Such feats partake more of foolhardiness than of courage. Save your swimming strength until occasion arises to make it of real use in saving your own life or the lives of others. Every time you go beyond your depth in the water you take a chance on losing your life. This is an absolutely sure proposition. Unless there is need for you to go beyond your depth don't take the risk.

When you get into a small boat don't think you are a humorist when you rock it, for you are not a humorist at all. You are only a rather ordinary sort of fool, for you are endangering not only your own life, which is of not much moment, but the lives of those who are in the boat with you. Sit still in the boat and enjoy the scenery, the fishing or whatever has taken you out on the water. When you go in swimming, don't go beyond your depth, or if you do go beyond your depth, don't try to swim across the river, the lake or far out into the ocean.

"Now suppose the majority of them (newspapers generally) are as bad as the majority of the newspapers in Salt Lake City, how can we expect the people to be civilized?" inquires a local afternoon contemporary. That paper needn't worry. If all of its subscribers should become uncivilized we wouldn't have to enlarge our insane asylum in order to accommodate them.

New Jersey people mobbed a man for hissing the American flag the other day. Yet New Jersey always extends a warm welcome to corporations that are formed for the purpose of robbing the American people.

The Ohio food and dairy inspector opened a can of "potted chicken" the other day and found it to contain veal. Well, if it was sound veal the inspector ought to consider himself and the people of Ohio lucky.

Kaiser Wilhelm talks of visiting the United States. We hope he makes up his mind to come, but we can't hope for as enthusiastic a reception as we are going to give William Jennings Bryan.

President Palma of Cuba seems to have a nice little revolution on his hands, though he is trying hard to nip it in the bud. Well, the boys must have their fun, even if it does disturb Palma.

Savings banks deposits in Kansas amount to $100 per capita. It is hardly necessary to add that Stensland of Chicago had no bank connections in Kansas.

That West Virginia bank cashier ought to be ashamed of himself. He had stolen only $20,000 when the bank examiner caught him.

Some of the people in the canyons enjoyed a few of the real pleasures of camping out on Sunday last.

And they call this the arid region. Wow!

Is it wet enough for you?
